Text

Sir, this Bearer Captein Acers being Now Dischargid of hyr Maiesties pay here in the which during his enterteinment he hath right well acquitted him self, and Dischargyd the parte of adyligent and faythfull servitour to hyr Maiestie. I could not but accompany him wyth my favorable lettres vnto yow in his behalf. though in deed otherwyse very much agreyvid that by reaseone of the small proporcion of Threasure here for the awnsvering of the discharges, I am enforced to lett such as have so well served hyr Maiestie here, passe hence soe sclenderly Satisfyed of theyr pay: for abowe xj^{li} which he hathe due here of his enterteynment, the Threasure fallith owt soe short that he canne receive but 3^{li}* which streyghtnes though for the present it bee moste to my Discreditt, yet I fear hereafter will lykwyse prove the noe small hindaunc of this service Wherfor beseching yow in the poore gentlemans behalf to further him¹⁵ as yow may for the obteyning of the reste of his paiment there, and in other his reasonable suittes, to afford hym yowr frendly favour. I committ yow to the goodnes of the Almightye Youres euer most assuredly,

Arthur Grey

{Mr Sec}retary

Note on handsThe text of the letter is written in a regular and conservative secretary hand (not Spenser's); Grey's signature is his familiar autograph. The address, though more of a rushed scrawl than usual, is in Spenser's secretary hand, and the endorsement in a later hand, probably added when the letter was filed in Westminster. The trace of an addressee note at the foot of the page ('{Mr Sec}retary') is in an italic hand, probably that of the same man who drafted the text of the letter; these notes were added to remind Grey, and Spenser when addressing and ultimately dispatching the letter, to whom the letter was to be addressed.
